Mme Pavri has travelled extensively since the last 22 years. During the course of her voyages at sea (being married to a Merchant Marine Captain) to distant lands, & experiencing various cultures she felt the need to share her personal & practical experiences. This was with the primary view of creating awareness globally towards “Comfort levels” being achieved by one and all (age being no bar) in any given situation, at all times- in various circumstances.

PDOG & ACTIVE LEARNING – i.e. Personality development, Orientation and Grooming & Active Learning Programs / workshops have proved to be successful in a number of individual cases as also in the case of Corporates and Institutions worldwide & it is the need of the day with India going global.

The concept of PDOG training & Active Learning is the requirement for every individual to feel comfortable in any given situation at any given time. Sharing live practical worldwide experiences offers one of the very best learning platforms to children of all age groups & to students of varied backgrounds. The workshop is fine learning but not a finishing school; However practical learning about how to save oneself or carry oneself in any given situation, be it good bad or an embarrassing one.

This course is not a finishing school or a training for Beauty pageants but purely the Study of How to Feel at Ease Everywhere Anywhere At Anytime!

The course is custom made to meet the needs of any age group/all ages as per Institutional/ Corporate requirement.

“Feeling at Ease Everywhere Anywhere At Anytime !”

It was during one of her trips - to Havana, Cuba that Mme Pavri was scheduled to board a merchant navy ship to join her husband who was Captain on board. She was accompanied by the Chief Officer of the vessel & a trainee officer - Dee-pak. They were all lodged by the shipping company at a five star resort while awaiting to board the ship.

Whilst attending a buffet luncheon, Deepak found himself completely dis-oriented in the resort where they were – He suddenly found himself being stared at by one and all present & just couldn't understand why!

The reason – He had entered the dining room in an absolutely dishevelled state in flip flops-rubber slippers, uncombed hair, unshaven, as though hit by a tor-nado. His entire look & personality made one imagine that he had jumped straight out of bed & bolted to the restaurant hungry as a horse! Then to make matters worse – he helped himself to the buffet lunch and topped his plate with a generous mountainous helping of rice, beans on top, a sauce & some meat atop that... And - a lush helping of pudding, some icecream & some cherries fi-nally right on top of all that ! Amazingly colourful I have to admit but most un-appetizing for the onlooker!

Cuba has acute food shortage-if a ship carrying any food/foodgrains enters any Cuban port other ships are told to give immediate right of way to the foodladen ship. Good food to come by is a dream for the average Cuban. Hence for the local Cuban it's a treat to have a meal with foreigners. There was a Cuban shipping agent who was also present at the luncheon on the same table as Mme Pavri and was amongst others- rather shocked at Deepaks crude approach.

Deepak was concerned about people staring at him~ he was rather uneasy as he knew something was just not right! Mme Pavri took Deepak aside politely and discretely and alongwith the Chief Officer the very same evening introduced him to an intensive PDOG training programme & Active Learning in order to immediately rectify the given situation.. to avoid further embarrassment of any kind.

The next day, same time in the afternoon - a tall handsome young man well groomed with hair combed back looking rather suave in a well cut black trouser suit entered the restaurant- It was none other than Deepak ~ his look was that of a thorough well groomed gentleman who extended comfort to himself and others around him.

PDOG & Active Action Learning changed the entire setting there making it comfortable for one & all.

The concept of PDOG & Active Action Learning is the need of the day for every individual to feel comfortable in any given situation.
